(Note: the above photo is slightly different from the version used for the online vote. This is due to an updated rendering after the design was selected. The changes included do not significantly impact the overall design.)

“This pilot process for soliciting public input was a success,” stated Mayor Steve Noble. “Not only did the public select a wonderful design, but the healthy dialogue that came out of this initiative was a great indication that our residents and stakeholders have a desire to be involved and give input. I look forward to continuing to expand our community engagement strategies to reach the broader public when future projects come up, using a variety of outreach tools, including online and paper surveys, phone interviews and in person focus groups.”
